

You Will Never See This Clock Again

Generated on Mon Jun 15 2026
16:38:36

A procedurally-generated zine by
Garlic Cracker Press

You Will Never See This Clock Again is a procedurally-generated zine about procedurally-generated clocks. Not one print of this zine and the clocks inside it will be the exact same.

Each clock in the zine comes with a scannable QR Code that lets you save the exact clock on your mobile or desktop as an app (detailed instructions inside!).

YWNSTCA is part of my You Will Never Read This Zine again project, an ongoing experimental publication that explores how the principles of computational art – simple rules lead to complex outcomes – can scale unconventional design in places where it would be difficult otherwise, e.g. multi-page publications.

Garlic Cracker Press
is an indie publishing project
by Grace Francine.
@gracefrancines
@garliccrackerpress

You Can Download the Clocks as an App! Here's how

Mon

01:

20:

20

(1)

Scan any of the clocks' QR Codes or open this link:

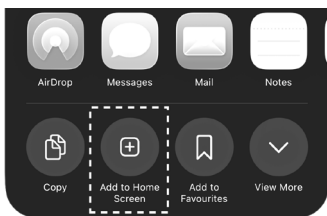

gfrancine.gitlab.io/ywnrtza-clock/

(2.a)

MOBILE USERS

Add the website to your homescreen

(3.a)

The app prevents your phone from sleeping,* use it as a desk clock!

*just tap /once/anywhere on the screen
after opening

(2.b)

DESKTOP USERS

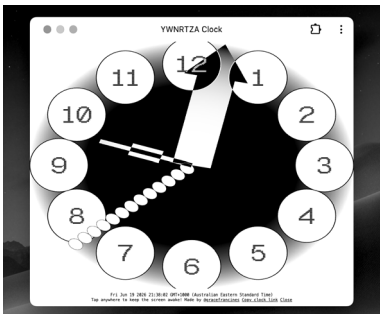

Click the install button next to the address bar (Chrome) or 'Add to Dock' on the share menu (Safari)

As a last resort simply search up 'how to download a PWA firefox/safari/etc'

(3.b)

Congrats! the website is installed as a desktop app.

Mon

01:

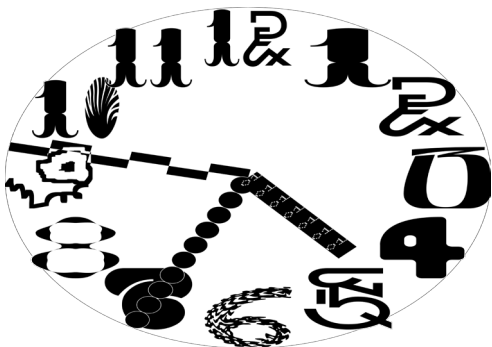

20:

20

(!! NOTE !!)

If you typed the website link as-is then downloaded it it'll generate a random clock every time, but if you opened the website from a clock QR code it will /only/ display that design.

To keep generating random clocks remove the question mark and everything after it ('?something=something...') in the URL.

I should probably tell you about Y. I visited her baby last November when I went home. It was the one thing that kept me going, 'meet her baby.' Exactly a year ago Y told me she wanted her daughter to resemble her husband, just in case she were to outlive him. I looked at her daughter, then at her, and thought, well—in the best way possible—I guess not. The baby likes staring. Her dad says her favorite thing to look at are fingers, so I did some finger glove choreography and she got overwhelmed and cried. She would also go, aowwuahwuagh and her parents would say to each other, 'she wants the pink blanket'. I should tell you Y is in her late 30s and didn't want to have kids for the 10 years or so before that.

Of everybody I've been acquainted with and then drifted away from, but not before I exchanged a few pieces of myself with, I think about a few women who are, in some way, they're timeless, time doesn't apply to them, and they mess up my head really bad. How do they manage to live 10 more lives in about a tenth of one. I can throw a dart on a map and they've lived there three years for an au pair or some work placement. They start a career, get bored, go to school in that order. Then look at me. I think of the next 3 years of my life, nothing comes to mind, and my resolve always ends up sounding like, 'not existing sounds better than not knowing.'

What's it like being friends with a ticking clock? Why would you be friends with a ticking clock. Everyone I meet is a ticking clock. My best friend is a ticking clock. My parents are ticking clocks I'm running my fingers on the hands. That person was a ticking clock, f$%ck, how could I have possibly known that was all the time I had, it never had to be that way. I am the three hours gone scrubbing tupperware scrubbing toilets and now nothing's left for what I love. I'm Time until tax season comes around time until the winter until the summer until the winter then I'll be deported. The next 50 years of my life depends on the next 2 years of my life, God damn! I was 19 a month ago!